ANECDOTES OF PITT.

Mr. Pitt used to come home to dinner after his Cabinet work a good deal exhausted, and required port wine, of which he generally drank a bottle during dinner in a rapid succession of glasses; but as soon as this stimulus restored his strength he drank no more. His conversation then became gay, good natured and hu morous, and he would tell all sorts of amusing stories; some of them about the colonel of Napier's regiment, the Forty-third. This was General Smith, an uncle of Sir Sidney; and certainly a humorist, as appeared by stories Mr. Pitt used to tell of him.

One was, that during the fears produced by the apprehension of the French invasion, the general sent by extraordinary express a parcel supposed to contain important news, but which turned out to be the nightcap of a member of the Government, who had left it behind when on a visit to the general. Another story was that, when he commanded on the south coast, he sent a dispatch to Pitt announcing that two French ships were then actually landing troops in three places!

Mr. Pitt liked practical fun, and used to encourage it. One instance, which Napier gives, shows Pitt in a point of view singular, and little to be anticipated of so generally solemn a personage. They-Lady Hester, James Stan-nope and Napier-had resolved to blacken his face with burnt cork, which he most strenuous ly resisted. Early in the fray, a servant an-nounced that Lord Castlereagh and Lord Liverpool had called, desiring to see him on im portant business. "Let them wait in the outer room," said the great minister, instantly returning to the battle, catching up a cushion and belaboring his attackers, who proved too many for him, and after a prolonged struggle got him down, and began daubing his face -when, with a look of well assumed confidence in his powers of still resisting, he said: "Stop; this won't do; I could easily beat you all, but we must not keep these grandees waiting any longer," so they were obliged to get a towel and basin of water to wash him clean before he received the grandees. Being thus made decent, the basin was hid behind the sofa, and the two lords ushered in. Then a sudden change and entirely new phase of manner appeared, to Napier's great surprise and admiration.

Lord Liverpool's manner was, as usual, meanlooking, bending, nervous and altogether pitful Lord Castlereagh, Napier said he had wellknown from his childhood; had often been engaged with him in such atheletic sports as pitching the stone, bar, and so on; and he looked upon him as a model of calm grace combined with great strength. What then, was his surprise when he saw both him and Lord Liverpool humbly bending as they approached the man who had so recently been maltreated with such an excess of fun!

But it was Mr. Pitt's sudden change of manner and look which most entirely fixed his attention. His tall, ungainly, bony figure seemed to grow up to the ceiling-his head thrown back, his eyes fixed immovable in one position, as if gazing into the heavens, and totally regardless of the two bending figures before him. For sometime they spoke, and he made now and then a short observation; but finally, with an abrupt stiff inclination of his body, but without casting his eyes down, dismissed them. And then, turning round with a laugh, caught up his cushion and renewed the fight.

Napier described to me another instance of what he called Mr. Pitt's power of countenance. Some time after the visit to Putney, while walking across the parade ground of the Horse Guards, he saw Mr. Pitt talking to some gentlemen, evidently upon business which interested him; Napier caught his eye, while still some forty yards distant. Pitt gave him a smile and nod of recognition, but on Napier advaceing toward him, his countenance assumed a commanding fierceness of expression difficult to describe, but unmistakably saying, "l'ass on; this is no time for foolery."-Lord Brougham's Autobiography.

THE LIVING PENNY. - Some one has been advertising an insinuating trick called the "Living Penny," and giving directions as to the manner of making money by the amiable delusion. The secret of this is explained.

It is simply an optical illusion, aided by the skill of the performer. You will observe there is a hair, one end of which is attaced to the penny with a small piece of beeswax; the other end must be attached to the button hole of the Yest by tying; then you are ready to perform. The performer should avoid standing with a strong light east upon his movements. Try and arrange it so that the shadow of your body will be thrown upon them, when it will be almost impossible to detect the hair, and particularly in the evening, which is the best time to exhibit it.

To make the penny crawl over your hand first take it in your right hand, and place it upon the back of your left, near the ends of Your fingers, wax side down, being careful not to miscalculate the length of play of the hair and so break it; then with the right hand make a few mysterious movements, accompanied with a chirping whistle, for effect only, and slowly move the left hand away from you, when the lenny will appear to be running toward you, while in reality it is a deception of the optical organs, as it is the hand which moves while the Penny is held by the hair. To make the penby crawl from a tumbler drop it carefully down the inclined side, to avoid its turning and exposing the wax; then operate as before, by moving the tumbler from you slowly. A litthe practice will suggest to you a hundred amusing and mysterious tricks to be performed with it. A little dexterity is required in attaching the wax to the penny without being observed; also, removing it, when a spectator desires to examine the penny. A slight pressure with the forefinger will attach it, and a sight scrape with the sail will remove it. Although the trick may seem simple to you at done dexterously,) it will cause the utmost wonder and astonishment to the spectator.
